Here is the code: char *token; char *s; char *p; token = malloc(sizeof(char)); if(token == NULL) exit(-1); s = "hi" ; p = strtok(s, " "); while(p!= NULL) { token = malloc(sizeof(char)); if(token == NULL) exit(-1); *token = *p; p = strtok(NULL, " "); } The problem is that every time that I reach the second call to strtok(), it overwrites the content of token! What am I doing wrong? A: if(token == NULL) should be: if(token == NULL) You need to set the value of the first variable to the return value of malloc

A Cross-Site Cross-Device Messaging Extension for Google Chrome Google Chrome has announced that it is working on an extension that will allow users to receive push notifications on supported Android devices without having to leave the browser. The extension will be integrated into the web browser, but it will be distributed to the users from Google's servers. Users of Google Chrome, iOS, and Android devices will be able to send messages to users of other mobile operating systems without an account by installing the Chrome extension developed by Google. The extension — which already has a test version — will allow users to receive messages from their Google account as well as their friends. The message will be read in the browser window and can be edited. For example, if the recipient hasn't loaded the webpage where the message is posted, the sender will receive a notification that the message hasn't health and the prevention of sickness and disease are major areas of concern in our society. One such concern is the promotion of physical fitness and exercise. Personal appearance has become a major concern in modern society, and one means for conveying the "appearance" of one's own personal fitness in a way that is inescapable is through the use of clothing. Modesty may also play a role in conveying information to others regarding the wearer's personal fitness. In today's world, many women spend a considerable amount of time caring for their personal appearance and their children. This means that their time is often limited to limited time for exercise, especially if they have jobs outside the home, such as in the health-care industry. Furthermore, it is often not at all convenient to take time out of one's schedule to exercise and go to a health club and, perhaps, spend an exorbitant amount of money to undergo the process of personal training. This is especially true for the teenager who is just beginning to develop a self-image. People tend to wear less clothing while exercising because of the lack of privacy or inconvenience. Therefore, the free movement of air is inhibited and the body becomes restricted and covered. Personal appearance is important to children and teenagers at all times, but becomes even more important as they move into adulthood. An appropriate way to express both modesty and personal fitness is through the proper use of clothing. 50b96ab0b6
